NPCs

The NPC templates found in the back of the 5e Basic Dungeon Master's Guide and the 5e Monster Manual are a great resource for a campaign. However they don't cover the range of military types that would be found in a feudal setting. There is the Guard and Knight template with little to choose from in between. The following are a basic set of templates to use in a setting inspired by Medieval Europe during the middle ages.

The templates are organized in terms of equipment, experience, and rank.

For equipment we have militia, archers, crossbowmen, light foot, medium, and knights. For experience and rank we have ordinary soldiers, sergeants, and captains.

Each manor can raise from 20 to 50 militia. Typically 1.5 men per household.

Militia these are armed peasants with minimal training. Typically raised only in times of all-out war or invasion.

There are from 3 to 5 yeoman per manor. Typically half trained with missile weapons and half with melee weapons.

Bow versus Crossbows. Most realms with sophisticated economies adopt crossbows as they are easier to learn and hit hard. However the earlier you set your medieval realms the more prevalent archers are. Also circumstances may result in the realm continuing to archers for example the Yew Tree and the Welsh/English Longbowmen.

Archers Yeomen who train regularly with bows.

Crossbowmen Yeoman who train regularly with crossbows.

Sergeants The most experienced archer will be put in charge of 5 men.

Light Foot Yeomen trained in melee weapons.

Sergeants The most experienced yeoman will be put in charge of 5 men.

- Medium Foot Castle guards, noble bodyguards, the most common troop type for standing military forces.
- Sergeant There will be one experienced soldier appointed to command 5 men.
- Captain An experienced veteran will be hired to command the entire force.
- Company The smallest organized unit consists of around 20 men. It will have 1 captain, 1 lieutenant (use captain stats) as second in command, 2 sergeants, and 16 troops.

Knights have their own special system of ranks.

- Squire A young noble under a tutelage of a knight.
- Knight An ordinary knight without land or men in the service of higher nobility.
- Knight, Banner A knight who holds an estate and commands a small force of men consisting of the knight, his squire, and three yeomen.
- Knight, Captain An experienced knight in command of other knights. Also may be used to represent a knight appointed to high positions such as the king's council or as sheriff of a county.
